

FAQs for GoodWILL Champions

What constitutes a simple Will?

We see our role as connecting GoodWILL Champions with clients who want to leave a gift in their Will to UNICEF Australia. For that reason, GoodWILL Champions will have some discretion in deciding what they think constitutes a 'simple Will' for the purposes of the project.

We would expect you to consider a Will to be 'simple' if it did no more than distribute assets to identified beneficiaries and appoint guardians for children - beyond that, you are free to decide whether a particular Will is simple based on the facts at hand.

What if someone comes to me and their Will isn't simple?

GoodWILL Champions are under no obligation to prepare Wills as a part of the project if they are not simple. However, if someone comes to you with a Will that isn't simple you may decide to either:

- Agree to prepare it for free as a part of the project, notwithstanding its relative complexity; or
- In the spirit of the project, talk to the prospective client about a reduced fee arrangement.

We would encourage you to have a preliminary conversation with all prospective clients to determine whether you consider their will to be simple - if not, best to let them know early on!

Liability and Insurance

Our role in this project is limited to connecting GoodWILL Champions with clients who want to leave a bequest to UNICEF. We do not accept any liability for any work undertaken as a part of this project and all work undertaken must fall within the existing insurance arrangements for GoodWILL Champion firms and lawyers.
